1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a general discussion of the principles of the theory of the function of the mind. It is shown that the mind is not a passive organ, but an active organ, and that it is capable of receiving information from the outside world, and of processing it in a way which is determined by the nature of the information itself. The author then proceeds to discuss the various theories of the function of the mind, and to show that the most plausible of these theories is the one which regards the mind as a complex system of interacting parts, each of which has its own function to perform.
